Good Day,

Thank you for your email correspondence to Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada's Immigration Representatives mailbox.

Question:

In registering EE profile, some candidates chose that the spouse or common-law partner did not accompany the applicant to come to Canada. In that case, the applicant may get higher scores in the CRS system.

In this February 13's invitation, the lowest invitation CRS points is only 75, so many families may reschedule their plan, like the whole family immigrate together. In submitting PR application, if the family change mind and choose that the spouse or common-law partner accompanies the applicant to come to Canada, is it Ok (if the recalculated score is still higher than the invitation score)? Will the IRCC challenge the applicant's intention or application for the inconsistency of the information or situation provided before/on lock-in date and the submission date? H

Answer:

You may choose to have your spouse accompany as long as your overall CRS score remains above 75.

We trust that this information will assist you.

Sincerely,

Immigration Representatives Mailbox

Dear Immigration Representative:

I am
standing with the Law Society of Ontario

in good standing with ICCRC and licensed paralegal in good

My question is:

In registering EE profile, some candidates chose that the spouse or common-law partner did not accompany the applicant to come to Canada. In that case, the applicant may get higher scores in the CRS system.

In this February 13's invitation, the lowest invitation CRS points is only 75, so many families may reschedule their plan, like the whole family immigrate together. In submitting PR application, if the family change mind and choose that the spouse or common-law partner accompanies the applicant to come to Canada, is it Ok (if the recalculated score is still higher than the invitation score) ? Will the IRCC challenge the applicant's intention or application for the inconsistency of the information or situation provided before/on lock-in date and the submission date ? H

Your prompt correspondence is highly appreciated.

Best regards,
